Forecast For Northwest England
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Friday 03 Dec 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Milder but mostly cloudy today, then colder with showers tomorrow.

Today:
Murky with drizzly rain and hill fog at first, although somewhat brighter across Cumbria. All areas becoming dry through the morning, with bright spells developing. Staying largely cloudy during the afternoon with the odd bright interval. Feeling much milder. Maximum temperature 9 deg C (48 deg F).

Tonight:
Mostly dry at first this evening but becoming increasingly windy overnight with showers developing, these turning wintry over the highest ground by the morning. A slight frost in sheltered locations. Minimum temperature 0 deg C (32 deg F).

Saturday:
Frequent showers or longer periods of rain, with a few sunny spells. Hail is possible with some snow over the highest ground. Feeling cold in strong and blustery northwesterly winds. Maximum temperature 7 deg C (45 deg F).

Outlook for Sunday to Tuesday:
Drier and sunnier on Sunday and still rather windy. Rain and hill snow on Monday, but brighter later. Possibly very windy by Tuesday with rain and hill snow. Feeling cold.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.